

Essay Writing Service

The manager of the examination department of Ofqual, the organization that monitors the quality of education in England, criticized students' use of online services for automatic essay writing. Students resort to using such services when doing their homework and do not write their own work.

Many of the essays that students buy online contain misspellings, factual errors, or serious grammatical errors, according to Ofqual. For example, one of the history essays that Essay Writing Service offers for sale has so many mistakes that instead of a top grade of A, the student received a very low grade of E for it.

Today, more and more British students are using the services of companies that write essays for them. Student paper writing services that create term papers and other writing assignments are growing at a rate of 10 companies a year in the UK. This has been the trend for the past decade. Such companies have long been accused of dishonestly making money. They, in turn, assure that they make it clear to students-customers: the essays the company provides can only be used as a sample, but should not be passed off as the student's own work. Dr. Thomas Lancaster, a professor at Coventry University, has been studying essay writing services for ten years. He coined the term "contract fraud" to describe the practice of students who buy a paper and turn it in under their own name. According to him, the "cost of error" has become much higher since 2012, due to rising tuition. A significant number of students are now willing to take the risk by turning to the student writing industry, whose revenue is believed to be around £100 million.a